Heritage Month Features Historic Sites

The Rice-Upshaw House and the William Looney Tavern, restored log structures near Dalton, were highlighted at the recent Arkansas Heritage Month celebration funded by a grant from the Arkansas Department of Heritage. The two structures are among the state’s oldest, dating to 1828 and 1833, respectively.

Both sites were open for tours on May 17-18. Visitors also were able to see demonstrations by historic interpreter Gerry Barker and his oxen, as well as log specialist Eric Sammons and Luke Roberts, blacksmith, both of the Mountain Home area. Also on hand to assist with the tours was historic interpreter Joan Gould of Preservation Matters. Both Gould and Sammons were members of the restoration team.

“We were pleased overall with the turnout,” said Black River Technical College’s VP for Development and REACH Coordinator Dr. Jan Ziegler. Rainy weather held down the numbers on Friday, but a good size crowd came out on Saturday for the event, she indicated. “We also appreciate the participation of BRTC faculty and staff in helping with the events, including transporting visitors between the two sites,” she said.

The event also included evening events at the Randolph County Heritage Museum where guests interacted with Barker in the creation of quill pens and heard about the early frontier “subscription schools” of the type attended by Reuben Rice, early settler credited with constructing the Rice-Upshaw House.

In addition, a second evening presentation by Barker addressed the topic “Frontier Slavery,” providing insight as to what life may have been like for enslaved African Americans owned by William Looney and other early settlers in the frontier era.

The two sites comprise Project REACH (Researching Early Arkansas Culture and Heritage). They were donated to BRTC for restoration and educational purposes in 2006 by descendants of Reuben Rice and William Looney. Making the donations were Jean Upshaw and family and Jack and Christina French.

Restoration of the structures, as well as additional outbuildings at the Rice-Upshaw site, have been funded through multiple grants awarded the college by the Arkansas Natural and Cultural Resources Council.

In addition to being open for public visits from 9-12 every second Saturday, March through October, special group tours can be arranged by contacting Jessica McFadden at 870-248-4000, 4189, or jessica.mcfadden@blackrivertech.edu.

Sequestration, for most people in NEA, is something that does not appear to directly affect us. It does, but in ways many of us may not realize. Our highly successful Career Pathways program for parents continues to be drastically affected. This means approximately 600 families in our region will be negatively affected, and probably thousands more in the coming years due to sequestration and the gridlock that exists. Previously, I have given other statistics proving that this is the most successful program in the state when it comes to changing lives and getting people meaningful jobs with good pay.

No other program or educational institution can claim a completion rate 25% higher than the state average and that 89% of their students that entered employment were still working a year later. (BRTC had the most completers and the most entering employment of all CP programs in Arkansas, as it continues its reputation of being among the best in Arkansas.) The kicker is that these are individuals who have been receiving government assistance—and who are now earning a living for their families and paying taxes.

Due to the initial budget deficit gridlock agreement last year, the CP program at BRTC received a budget reduction of approximately 15%. Now sequestration kicks in, resulting in a budget reduction of almost 32%. You can do the math…and total up the damage. The result is more individuals will be on government assistance and fewer will have meaningful employment. From Career Pathways, in one recent graduating class they produced 45% of our RN students, 28% of our LPN students and 47% of our Respiratory Care students.

In addition to reducing staff, we have fewer funds to assist students to get their training/education to become solid taxpayers; therefore we are forced to help fewer students to achieve their dreams and provide for their families.

There is serious doubt that this program will exist two years from now, as we have been informed to expect more funding reductions for the most successful job placement program in Arkansas. Congress will decide.

The BRTC Foundation, based on recent figures, will set a fundraising record this year, as more donors are enjoying making a meaningful difference in people’s lives. As you can see inside this issue, a large number of scholarships have already been awarded, with more expected. We need even more funding next year. The futures of many depend upon it.

Anyone wishing to make a donation to the Foundation Scholarship fund may contact Vickie French at 870-248-4070.
